ABSTRACT

This bibliography includes books, published articles, conference papers, dissertations, and studies in progress--all with a focus on women. In most cases, only titles and authors are cited. The research projects are organized by categories: affirmative action; women and the economy; women and education; women and employment; the family; feminism and politics; health; life cycle/aging; psychology and sex roles; sexuality; status of women; and women's studies. An alphabetical listing of the researchers and their addresses and phone numbers follows the bibliography. Readers are invited to contribute new entries to the bibliographic card system in the publisher's research library; forms are included at the end of the volume for this purpose. (Author/CS)

Introduction

Many of us who work at large decentralized universities carry around a suspicion that someone else on campus must be interested in the same topics for research we are . . . if we could only find them. And those researchers who work at smaller institutions often dream of the colleaguial exchanges that must take place in the larger settings. Such dreaming to offset scholarly isolation can never be as effective as accurate information--we hope that this Directory may serve as a first step toward overcoming that feeling by providing the information.

The listing which follows includes quite a range of research projects, all with the common focus on women. Some are citations of books, some published articles, presented papers, dissertations, and even some studies still in process. We have given you titles (and only sometimes more complete bibliographic data) in the belief that you will carry out the investigative work yourself; and that is why we have provided addresses and phone numbers of researchers in an alphabetical listing following the citations.

In order to facilitate finding out about particular interest areas, we have organized the list of projects into categories, from "Affirmative Action" to"Women's Studies: Language and Letters." The units coincide with those used at C.E.W.'s fine library; we hope the categories make sense to you. If you seek further information, please feel free to inquire in person or by phone to our librarian, Pat Padala.

This Directory represents a listing as comprehensive as possible. But it is a first level endeavor, so your assistance in augmenting it will be appreciated. Please note that we have sought research within the Midwest region primarily, but have included studies from other places as well. We intend to keep up to date with new information about research through a card system in our library, after publication of this work, and therefore welcome contributions from our readers to this file. And do use CEW as a resource for your work in other ways you may deem appropriate.

Permit me a list of people who deserve my gratitude tenfold and shall hereby now receive it in public: for their hard work and good humor I wish to thank: Lucinda Palmer, Pat Padala, Katherine Teasdale Tucker, and of course our well-known and highly regarded director of CEW, Jean Campbell.
